TREK INTRODUCES SSD DRIVE

SINGAPORE, 17 January 2008 – Mainboard listed Trek 2000 International Ltd (“Trek” or the “Group”) today announced the introduction of the first SSD IEEE 1667 compliant drive in anticipation of the new IEEE 1667 standard that will soon be incorporated into operating systems that are commonly used in computers, electronic and other similar devices.

The SSD Drive provides an option to the commonly used hard disk drive (HDD). It uses the solid-state memory i.e the NAND FLASH and therefore has no moving parts. As such, it is a more reliable device with the ability to deliver higher performance in terms of data transfer and its random read-write performance is significantly enhanced by more than 1,000 times compared to the conventional HDD, which is an optical media and is therefore relatively sensitive.

Trek will be unveiling its IEEE 1667 SSD Drive at the forthcoming CeBIT exhibition planned for the first week of March in Hanover, Germany.

Commenting on Trek’s latest engineering feat, Mr. Henn Tan, Chairman and CEO says, “we do not have the luxury of time when creating solutions for the technology industry. Our solutions not only have to be unique, they also have to be fast and must reach the market ahead of the devices to bring value to our customers.”
